Young Artists Concert to feature student performers, Oakland Symphony Orchestra

Four of Oakland University’s most promising music students will perform with the Oakland Symphony Orchestra (OSO) during the 21st Annual David Daniels Young Artists Concert, which takes place at 3 p.m. on Sunday, Feb. 11 in Varner Recital Hall on OU’s campus.

The students are the winners of the 2017-2018 Oakland University Concerto Competition and were selected to reprise their performance with the OSO.

“The concerto competition is always fiercely contested and all of this year’s finalists demonstrated great maturity, poise and artistry,” said Dr. Gregory Cunningham, music director of the OSO and professor of orchestral and wind conducting at OU.

The Young Artists Concert program will feature four solo student performances:

- Jamie Blair (mezzo soprano) – Se Romeo t’uccise un figlio from I Capuleti e i Montecchi (1830) by Vincenzo Bellini
- Gillian Tackett (soprano) – Maritza’s Aria from Countess Maritza (1924) by Emmerich Kálmán

In addition, the OSO will perform Capriccio italien by Pyotr Ilyich Tchaikovsky and Bolero by Maurice Ravel.

Tickets for the Feb. 11 performance are $20 general admission or $10 for students, and can be purchased in advance without service fees at Star Tickets or by phone at (800) 585-37. They can also be purchased on OU’s campus at the Varner Hall Box Office.
